When the child element is toggled, I'm triggering a transition. That transition works fine. But once I have my transition finished, the event to toggle the child element no longer works. I believe the problem is due to how I'm binding the toggle event to the transition. I believe I need to bind the toggle to the element as the transition is finished. How do I fix it? const CommentBox = { template: '#commentBox', props: ['title'], data() { return { elements: ['text', 'checkbox'], toggle: true }; }, methods: { toggleCheckbox() { this.toggle =!this.toggle; }, transition(dom) { setTimeout(() => { const Target = dom.closest('.checkbox'); if (!Target.is(this.elements.checkbox)) { Target.trigger('click'); }, 1000); }, } }; new Vue({ el: '#commentBox', data() { return { comment: 'comment box', }; }, components: { CommentBox }, }); A: Your code works, but I think you're misusing the transition function. The purpose of the transition function is to specify how the component should slide in when it's applied. When you call this.toggle 570a42141b
